Greater Kansas City Chapter of ARMA International, Spring Seminar

Date: April 14, 2010

Time: 8:30 to 4:00

Location: National Archives and Records Administration, Kansas City, Missouri

Title: Help! Is RIM Compliance Even Possible Today?

Description: We know about the explosive growth in electronic documents and records. We know about the continued growth in regulation requirements. What about the growth in tools to help manage this mess? There are many tools claiming compliance automation for records management and legal holds. Can these tools really help compliance? We will start at the 30,000-foot level looking at the issues and technologies that confront records management today. From this vantage, we will examine the intersections between tools, information, and compliance.

Objectives: Upon completion of this seminar, you will be able to:

- Analyze the information management tools in use within your organization and identify compliance risks and opportunities for filling in any existing information management or legal hold “gaps”
- Communicate with your IT staff concerning current and future tool deployment and become part of the reviewing team for future projects
- Apply Generally Accepted Recordkeeping Principles® and begin to educate staff about how to apply these principles throughout your organization

Biography:

Brent Gatewood, CRM, is a project manager and director of technology operations for PelliGroup Inc., a records and information management (RIM) consulting firm. He has been active in the information management profession for more than 15 years and has spoken frequently at local and national conferences on many topics, including basic RIM practices, technology aspects of RIM, and large-scale RIM project management. Gatewood may be contacted at bagatewood@pelligroup.com.
